GOV. WILLSON GRANTS PARDON TO FIVE.

On last Friday evening Gov. Willson granted a pardon to W. S. Taylor, Charles Finley, John Davis, Harlan Whitaker and John Powers charged with being accessories to the murder of Senator Wm. Gobel in 1860. This leaves Yontsey the only man to be punished for this murder and he is now serving a life sentence in the penitentiary. Gov. Willson says after a careful review of the case that he believes that Yontsey fired the fatal shot, and that Taylor, Powers, Howard et al were not guilty of the crime charged, therefore he pardoned them. This ends the trials in the notorious Gobel murder cases of which so much has been said and written and which probably came nearer causing a revolution than any other thing that ever happened in the history of the State of Kentucky.

Whether or not these men could have had a fair trial in the courts is a question, as politics seemed to be the ruling factor in all the trials that were had. One thing is certain that there were partisans on either side that could not have given the other side justice, but we believe that they should have put themselves within the jurisdiction of the courts before asking for a pardon.

Unexplored Area.

David George Huxley, the geographer and explorer, says that in western Asia there are vast areas on which no European foot has yet been trod nor even a keen eye to have looked. The great desert lies in Arabia. Although the southern half of Arabia is, according to native report, by a wilderness called generally "the land of the void," the explorer has ever entered this land and has discovered some good things. It would take a book to tell of the possibilities of this land.

TALK ONLOOKER
BY
WILBUR D. NESBIT.

WHEN A MAN'S DISCOURAGED

When a man's discouraged, then he needs grass and trees and sky. More than he needs fellow men. Who give him strength for sight. Needs to see that fortune's things have no influence on things.

Trees, and roses in the dew. Vines that chuckle into bloom. Lift the heart that's feeling blue. Bright out of the depths of gloom. Show him that the hand of fate loosens, if we only wait.

Life has lessons for us all. But the greatest ever learned is, no matter what befall. Things keep growing unconcerned. Things that have to grow, they grow in the meanest winds that blow.

Life, pink of buttercup. Though you crush it with your heel In an hour is looking up— "Hush! not the time to feel That the world's against it. No, It knows that it has to grow."

Even weeds turn to the sun. Just as other things that grow. Looking up for light and fun. And forgetting care and pain. And they never look in vain. Spite of driving wind and rain.

When a man's discouraged, he can't wait for things that grow. What he wants is grass and tree. And the courage of the dove. Things that have to grow, they grow in the meanest winds that blow.

As to Currier's... Imogene, daughter of West Wind, Ind., writes to us and asks that we give her our views on curried chicken at once. She says she is going to entertain at dinner and some one has suggested curried chicken as a feature of the menu, and she frankly confesses her ignorance on the subject.

Well, Imogene, we are not so wise about this subject as we might be, our experience with currying things have ended when we attempted to lead the glad and free life of the honest tiller of the soil and discovered that it involved arising at four a. m. and toiling merrily until eight p. m. with intermissions on election day and Sunday.

But if anybody wants you to curry a chicken you are fully justified in winking the other eye knowingly and asking them if the universal 23 has ever been called to their attention.

You can curry a horse. You do this by rasping its ribs with a large, serrated implement that looks like the working model of a harrow. It is no fun to curry a horse, because its flowing locks get tangled, and when you become too energetic in putting the marcel waves in its mane it will joyously switch its tail into your eyes and cause you to say things that should not emanate from the lips of a true, upright individual. Also, if the horse is so inclined, it will suddenly lift one of its feet and place it forcibly upon your vest pocket and jeopardize your watch crystal.

What useful or ornamental purpose will a chicken curried or uncurried, serve at a dinner? Fry it, if you will, but to do so you will have to remove the unfryable adornment. Next time anyone suggests currying a chicken, ask him if you resemble a hostler in a henery.

We may be wrong about this, Imogene, but you asked for our opinion.

The Easy Life.

In time, aided by the successful experiments of the campaign of 1908, the soliciting and registering of the suffrage of the people became freed of all its annoying aspects. Clever moving pictures, flashed by small machines, presented the personality of the candidates in the humblest homes; perfect phonographic records at the same time rendered their speeches and presented the issues; pneumatic tubes conveyed the ballots to a central poll and automatic calculating machines gave the results in no time at all.

The only machinery that was not changed was the machine method of selecting the candidates—but even this relieved the proletariat of much mental stress.

Hopeless Case.

"Why, Lushley, I am astonished to see you out! The last thing I heard about you was that the doctor had given you up."

"Well, he has. He—er—told me the other day he had charged up my account to profit and loss."—Chicago Tribune.

He Went Alone.

Della, the quick witted, was on her way home from a wake the other night. It was late, and the street was lonely, and Della is comely. A would-be gallant called up to Della and said, "May I walk home with you?" Della turned on him frank and fearless eyes and asked: "Why? Are you afraid to go alone?"

Can any beauty who tells plaintive tales of persistent "monsters" beat that for effective repartee?

And what became of the would-be gallant? "Shure he went off so quick I only saw the tails of his coat turnin' the corner," said Della as she wiped the soup-suds off her arms.—New York Globe.

FOR YOUR HEALTH'S SAKE

PREVENTION OF CONTAGION.

We should be as willing at all times to do as much to protect our neighbor's children as we would demand that our neighbors do to protect ours.

The all important thing to do in preventing the spread of contagion in a community is to see to it that sick children are not allowed to mingle with children that are well. This means the exclusion of sick or ailing children from the schools and churches and that they must not be permitted to mingle with other children until the department of health says it is safe for them to do so.

Early Symptoms of Tuberculosis

Officers of the Health Department of New York City, has just prepared a striking statement of the first symptoms of pulmonary tuberculosis at the request of the New York State Charities Aid Association.

It is evident that unless persons who have incipient tuberculosis recognize that something is wrong and seek medical advice, treatment will begin too late to secure the best results, and Dr. Biggs describes in simple terms, within the comprehension of all, what physical evidences, which might seem unimportant, are liable to be indications of the beginning of the disease. The statement which is given below, has been submitted to, and signed by Dr. E. L. Trudeau, Dr. Livingston Farrand, Dr. Charles Hitchcock, Dr. Edward C. Janeway and Dr. Eugene H. Porter.

Any of the following symptoms should lead one to consult his physician and have his lungs examined and sputum tested:

1. A cough lasting a month, except a whooping cough.
2. Poor appetite, (especially in the morning,) and indigestion, loss of weight and strength, and pallor (generally "run down.")
3. Hoarseness lasting several weeks.
4. Spitting, especially in the morning.
5. Night Sweats.
6. Spitting blood.
7. Fever in the afternoon, shown by flushed face and tired feeling.

Any, several, or all of these symptoms coming after a severe cold, gripe, bronchitis, whooping cough, measles, typhoid fever, or any other acute disease, may indicate tuberculosis.

Too much publicity cannot be given to knowledge of this kind, which may be the means of saving untold sorrow and suffering, and thousands of lives besides.

The Board of Health of every community in the State should endeavor to convey this life-saving information to every citizen within its reach, and its importance should not be overlooked by any one interested in the preventive work of the anti-tuberculosis campaign.—Journal of Outdoor Life.

The Name Sarah.
Sarah, or, rather, the Vulgate form Sara, was not unknown in preformation days. It occurs three times in J. H. Jewett's "Catalogue of Charters at Berkeley Castle." We have Sara, wife of Gilbert fil Radulph de Baggepath, circa 1250. In the reign of Henry III. Ralph Jowas granted to Sara de Biokesant half a virgate of land in Nuneaton—that is, South Nuneaton, in Oxfordshire—and in a deed dated 11 Richard II. the names occur of a William Palmer of Oxford and Sara, his wife (pages 102, 120 and 170). I know of but two instances of the name Sarah being used. A remote cousin of my own was baptised thus at Scotter in 1577. The following is the entry in the register: "Sara Peacock, the daughter of Richard, the thirde of Marche."—London Notes and Queries.

Mrs. Wabash—She's had six weddings in her life.

Mrs. Dearborn—What! Been a bride six times?

lose if life itself were at stake. The are of value to her. The are of value to her. The are of value to her.

This is the way to concoct those fragrant, dainty waters that the Japs serve with tea: Break the white of one egg in a bowl; add one table-spoonful of sugar, stir a moment, and then add one table-spoonful of flour and one-half teaspoonful of softened butter. Beat until about as thick as cream. Pour a teaspoonful of this batter on the reverse side of a large baking pan, slightly greased, and with the back of a spoon spread it until about four inches in diameter and almost as thin as tissue paper. Bake in a moderate oven until brown and while still warm roll around a cooking stick. Keep in a covered tin.

A delicious Italian cake which is always served with ices in the pastry shops of Genoa and other southern Italian towns is made thus: Warm half a cupful of butter until it is a little soft, beat it to a cream with half a cupful of sugar. Break in an egg and beat until quite smooth; add one by one, three or more eggs, beating hard, and then add half a cupful of flour. Pour the mixture on a buttered tin and bake about ten or fifteen minutes. Turn it upside down on a sieve to cool and when cold spread thickly with apricot jam and then with chocolate icing. Place in the oven a moment, then cool and cut into shapes.

A delicious way to serve cake is as follows: Prepare a cup cake batter and bake it in shallow square tins. When done cut it into small squares and cover the top of each with a little of the following mixture: Cook a cupful of raisins in a small quantity of water. When tender remove them from the fire and chop fine, then add a scant cupful of sugar and put back to cook. Let this boil down until "slurpy" and thick. After spreading the mixture over the cake sprinkle with minced nuts of any kind. English walnuts and almonds combined are good in this way. If the tops are too soft dredge some powdered sugar over them to prevent sticking.

For teas and luncheons some housewives like to serve sandwiches made as follows: Have ready thin buttered slices of delicate brown bread. Spread them, after trimming, with a layer of strawberry jam or peach marmalade. Cover with a layer of fresh cream cheese. Press two slices together with the fillings against each other and serve.

Anise Zwitsch.
Beat whites of five eggs, add yolks, one-half pound of sugar; stir 20 minutes (same direction always) to a cream. Add one heaping table-spoon of anise seed and half a pound of flour. Stir together in a white. Bake in long, narrow tin, rounded bottom if possible, in moderate heat for about twenty minutes. When partly cooled cut in slices of three-quarters of an inch each and brown in oven.

KNOWS CUBS AFTER 2 YEARS.

Bear Mad with Delight When She is Accidentally Reunited with Her First Born.

San Francisco.—Although they had been separated for more than two years when they had been accidentally placed in the same cage at a local zoo to allow of some alterations in other enclosures, Nellie, a recent grizzly bear, and her first-born cub, now almost grown, recognized each other at once, and displayed remarkable affection.

As soon as the cubs were taken to her cage the mother grizzly with delight and jumped into the air, alighting stiff-legged on all fours. The bear children were equally enthusiastic, and hardly could be restrained long enough to enter the gate. They stuck their paws through the bars of the enclosure and attempted to squeeze through at the nearest point. Once they were inside Nellie took first one, then another of her offspring in her arms in true motherly fashion and rolled upon the ground, playfully hitting and clawing them.

Following the first separation the big animal killed two little cubs. This was done, in the opinion of the superintendent, that she might be spared the pain of rearing them and finally being separated from them.

Tennis Court a Lawn Now.

Washington.—Another old Roosevelt landmark now lies under the sod at the White House. Preparatory to erecting an annex to the executive offices the landscape gardener of the president has torn up the old tennis court of President Roosevelt, made particularly famous by the so-called Roosevelt "tennis cabinet," with a view to burying it completely with a soft green lawn by next summer.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE.

The attention of the people of Jackson and Breathitt county is again called to the Conference of Sunday School workers to be held by Mr. W. J. Vaughan at the Methodist church in Jackson on next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, and a mass meeting to be held at night. It is to be earnestly hoped that all Sunday School workers of Jackson and the county will be present at these meetings and lend their influence towards making them a success. The Sunday School cause in Breathitt county needs a great uplift, and now is the time to begin the work.

The following is by H. H. Gibson Secretary:
Kentucky has 119 counties of which only 31 have reached the high standing required by the International Sunday School Association to receive the name of Banner county. For the years of 1907 and 1908 we are proud of the fact that in Breathitt county by the good work of the officers of the Breathitt County Sunday School Association, a branch of the International Association and the quick response of friends of your association in giving information about their schools and contributing funds has enabled us to be a Banner County. We earnestly desire to continue to hold this position, but each year or two the standard is being raised making it more difficult to attain, however it is more to our credit when we do continue in the highest class of counties in our State.

Mr. W. J. Vaughan, State Field Worker, will meet with the Executive Committee May 4th, at 2 p. m. in the Methodist church in Jackson. The following are the members of the Executive Committee:

Officers:—Rev. G. E. Drushal, Ph. D. President; Rev. C. M. Summers, Vice-President; H. H. Gibson, Secretary and Treasurer. Dept Superintendent:—Mrs. G. W. Fleenor, Elementary; Miss Sue Leonard, Intermediate; W. W. McGuire, Adult; Miss Mary Lewis, Educational; Mr. Pearl Combs, Visitation; Rev. Paul Derthick, Organization. Written reports from each officer and superintendent is required.

The Superintendent of each department is supposed to be well informed in the work and instruct and assist the superintendents in each of the three districts into which our county is divided. District Superintendents should correspond with County Superintendents, fully about their department.

Each Sunday School of all denominations in the county should keep complete records and be prepared to make a report to their District Secretary in November of each year for upon these reports our standing as a Banner County largely depends.

The Banner Counties for the past year are, Boyd, Boyle, Breathitt, Casey, Clark, Crittendon, Fulton, Garrard, Grant, Green, Hardin, Harlan, Henderson, Jefferson, Lawrence, Mason, Meade, Nicholas, Ohio, Oldham, Pulaski, Scott, Spencer, Trimble, Union, Washington, Webster, Woodford.

A public mass meeting will be held in the evening at 7:30 o'clock May 4th, in the Methodist church, to hear addresses on Sunday School progress and its vital importance to our county now. We want the house filled full to give Mr. Vaughan a grand reception in this Banner County.

H. H. GIBSON, Secretary.

A student in one of the colleges found himself face to face with an examination in the Testament history, a subject which he had entirely ignored all term. Taking counsel with some friends, he decided that all he really needed to know was the long list of names of the kings of Israel and their dates. So he crammed them each and all into his bursting head. But, sad to relate, all he was asked to do was to criticize the acts of Moses. Not one act of Moses—good, bad or indifferent—could the unfortunate youth remember, so after much thought he wrote as follows:
"Far be it for one as humble as I am to criticize the acts of the great Moses, but if you would care to know the names of the kings of Israel and their dates you will find them written below." He was passed.—Harper's Magazine.

Marlin
22 Caliber Repeating Rifle

Model No 20
The safety, comfort and convenience of the Marlin solid top, closed breech and side ejection feature are combined with the quick, easy manipulation of the popular sliding fore-end or "pump" action in the new Model 20 Marlin rifle.

In rapid firing—the real test of a repeater—the Marlin solid top is always a protection and prevents smoke and gas blowing back; the ejected shell is never thrown into your face or eyes, and never interferes with the aim; the fallercocks your hand and helps quick operation.

It handles the short, long and long rifle cartridges without change in adjustment, and the deep barrel riding guarantees the accuracy, making it the finest little rifle in the world for target shooting and for all small game up to 1500 yds.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE BATTLES OF WASHINGTON.

At twenty minutes after 12 Senator Langdon and Secretary Haines were still undisturbed by any move on the part of Penbody and Stevens, who maintained a silence that to Haines was distinctly ominous. His experience at the capital had taught him that when the senate machine was quiet it was time for some one to get out from under.

Miss Williams, the naval committee's stenographer, entered.

"Senator Langdon," she said, "Senator Penbody and Senator Stevens are in committee room 6, and they told me to tell you that they are here."

"I can't say, please, sir."

"D—d," interjected Langdon, laughing.

"Yes, sir, that's it. If they come in here at 12:30, you must come to them, they say."

"Tell the gentlemen I'm sitting here with my hat on the back of my head smoking a good cigar with nails driven through both shoes into the floor—and looking at the clock."

At 12:25 Senator Stevens entered.

"I came to warn you, Langdon," he said, "that Senator Penbody's patience is nearly exhausted. You must come south to get a naval base at Alticola or anywhere else. If you do not agree to take his advice this naval bill and any other that you are interested in now or in future will be trampled underfoot in the senate. Mississippi will have no use for a senator who cannot produce results in Washington, and that will prove the bitterest lesson you have ever learned."

"I'm waiting for Penbody here, Stevens."

"Oh, ridiculous! Of course he's not coming. Why, Langdon, he's the king of the senate. He has the biggest men of the country at his call. He's—"

"He's got one minute left," observed Langdon, looking at the clock, "but he'll come. I trust Penbody more than the best clock made at a time like this when—"

The figure of the senior senator from Pennsylvania appeared in the doorway.

"Good day, Senator Langdon," he remarked idly.

"Same to you. Have a cigar, senator," said Langdon. He turned and winked significantly at Haines.

The three senators seated themselves.

"I suppose you wouldn't consider yourself so important, Langdon, if you knew that we now had we could get no other member of the naval affairs committee over to our side for Alticola," began Penbody.

"That gives us a majority of the committee without your vote."

"That wouldn't prevent me from making a minority report for Gulf City and explaining why I unde that report, would it?" the Mississippi asked blandly.

Penbody and Stevens both knew that it wouldn't. Stevens exchanged glances with "the boss of the senate" and in low voice began unloading to Langdon a proposition to which Penbody's assent had been gained.

"Langdon, we would like to be alone," and he nodded toward Haines.

"Sorry can't oblige, senator," Langdon replied. "And I'd together make up the senator from Mississippi."

"All right. What I want to say is this: The president is appointing a commission to investigate the condition of the unemployed. The members are to go to Europe, five or six countries, and look into conditions there, leisurely, of course, so as to formulate a piece of legislation that will solve the existing problems in this country. A most generous expense account will be allowed by the government. A member can take his family. A son, for instance, could act as financial secretary under liberal pay."

"I've heard of that commission," said Langdon.

"Well, Senator Penbody has the naming of two senators who will go on that commission, and I suggested that your character and ability would make you."

"Good glory," exclaimed Langdon, "you mean that my character and ability would make me something or other if I kept my mouth shut in the senate this afternoon? Stevens, I've been surprised so many times since I came to the capital that it doesn't offend me any more. I'm just amazed at your offer or Senator Penbody's."

"I want to tell you two senators that there's only one thing that I want in Washington—and you haven't offered it to me yet. When you do I'll do business with you."

The senate today if the voters had anything to say about it."

The Pennsylvania shrugged his shoulders.

"And now I'll tell you honorable senators," went on Langdon, thoroughly aroused, "something to surprise you. I have discovered that you were not working for yourselves alone in the Alticola deal, but that you intend to turn your hand over to the Standard Steel company at a big profit as soon as this naval base bill is passed. Then that company will squeeze the government for the best part of the hundred millions that are to be spent."

The senator sank back in his chair and gazed at his two opponents.

Those two senators jumped to their feet.

"Come, Stevens, let him do what he will. We cannot stay here to be insulted by the ravages of a madman," cried the Pennsylvania. But he brought his associate to a standstill midway to the door. "By the way, Langdon, what is it you are going to do in the senate this afternoon?" he asked.

"You said you were going to make us honest against our will. You know you can't do anything."

But Haines turned his face toward the speaker and grinned broadly, to the senator's intense discomfort.

"I'll do more than that," announced Langdon, rising and pounding a fist into his open hand. "I'll make you and Stevens more popular than you ever were in your lives before."

"Hah!" shouted Penbody.

"I'll do even more yet. I'm going to make you generous—patriotic. And, I regret to say, I'll give you the chance to make the his of your careers."

The polished hypocrites looked at him, too astonished to move.

"How? What?" they gasped.

Swept on by his own enthusiasm and the force of his own courageous honesty, the voice of the southern rose to oratorical height.

"This afternoon," he explained, "when the naval base committee makes its report, I will rise in my place and declare that for once in the history of the senate men have been found who place the interests of the government they serve above any chance of pecuniary reward. These men are the members of the naval base committee."

"With this idea in view, realizing that dishonest men would try to make money out of the government, these members of the naval base committee, after they settled on Alticola, went out quietly and secured control of all the land that will be needed for the naval base, and these men secured this at a very nominal figure. Now they are ready to turn over their land to the government at exactly what they paid for it without a cent of profit."

"Then they're going to sit up over there in that senate. They're going to realize that a new kind of politics has arrived in Washington—the kind that I and lots of others always thought there was here."

"And, gentlemen," he advanced on his colleagues triumphantly—"when I, Senator Langdon of Mississippi, your creation in politics, have finished that speech I dare one of you to get up and deny a word."

"The boss of the senate" and his satellite were dumfounded. Flaming believing that Langdon could find no way to pass the bill for Alticola and yet spoil their crooked scheme, they were totally unprepared for any such denials.

"Langdon, we would like to be alone," and he nodded toward Haines.

"Sorry can't oblige, senator," Langdon replied. "And I'd together make up the senator from Mississippi."

"All right. What I want to say is this: The president is appointing a commission to investigate the condition of the unemployed. The members are to go to Europe, five or six countries, and look into conditions there, leisurely, of course, so as to formulate a piece of legislation that will solve the existing problems in this country. A most generous expense account will be allowed by the government. A member can take his family. A son, for instance, could act as financial secretary under liberal pay."

"I've heard of that commission," said Langdon.

"Well, Senator Penbody has the naming of two senators who will go on that commission, and I suggested that your character and ability would make you."

"Good glory," exclaimed Langdon, "you mean that my character and ability would make me something or other if I kept my mouth shut in the senate this afternoon? Stevens, I've been surprised so many times since I came to the capital that it doesn't offend me any more. I'm just amazed at your offer or Senator Penbody's."

"I want to tell you two senators that there's only one thing that I want in Washington—and you haven't offered it to me yet. When you do I'll do business with you."

"What's that? Speak out, man!" said Penbody quickly.

"A square deal for the people of the United States."

"Good Lord," exclaimed "the boss of the senate," "is this Washington or is it heaven?"

chance and the miles it could gain in an emergency; he must overcome the power of Standard Steel; he must fight the resourceful brain of the masterful Penbody himself.

Penbody whispered to Stevens, "We must pretend to be beaten."

Then the Pennsylvania advanced, smiling, to Langdon and held out his hand.

"Senator Langdon," he said, "I'm beaten. You're beaten the leader of the senate, something difficult to be."

Time passed quickly. The old planter enjoyed seeing his daughters have so happy a time, and he was not insensible to the charm of his hostess' conversation, for Mrs. Spangler had studied carefully the art of ingratiating herself with her guests.

Suddenly realizing that he had probably reached the limit of the time he could spare, the senator drew out his watch.

"What a stunning job you wear," quickly spoke Mrs. Spangler, reaching out her hand and taking the watch from her guest's hands as the case snapped open.

"Oh, that's Carolina's doing," laughed Langdon. "She said the old gold chain that my grandfather left me was—"

"Why, how lovely," murmured Mrs. Spangler, gazing at the watch.

"We have plenty of time yet. Won't you be so kind as to tell me your time is the same as mine," she added, nodding her head toward a French renaissance clock on the black marble mantel.

As the hostess did this she deftly turned back the hands of the senator's watch thirty-five minutes.

"Senator Langdon, I'm beaten," he said. "What more, you're given me the chance of a lifetime to become known as a public benefactor. As soon as you've finished your speech in the senate I will get up and make another one—to second yours. Here's my hand. Anything you may ever want out of Penbody in the future shall be yours for the asking."

Langdon refused to grasp the proffered hand.

Senator Stevens made a show of protesting against his superior's seeming surrender.

"But," he objected, "look here!" Penbody turned upon him instantly.

"Oh, shut up, Stevens; don't be a fool. Come on in. The water's fine."

The pair of schemers, with Norton at their heels, hurried away.

The Pennsylvania drew Stevens into committee room 6, and, ordering the stenographer to leave, drew up chairs where both could sit, facing the door.

"We've thrown dust in that old senator's eyes," whispered Penbody. "It's now ten after 1. He is to be recognized to make his speech at 2:30. That gives us two hours and twenty minutes."

"Yes, but for what?" asked Stevens excitedly. "I've been trying myself to think of something. What will you do?"

"What can you do?" the senator smiled at him.

"The boss of the senate" smiled at him, as though amused and scornful of his limitations as a strategist, as a tactician, as a tactician.

Then his jaw set hard, and his brows contracted.

"I will not do anything. I cannot do anything," he hesitated a full ten seconds—"but Jake Stein—"

Stevens' hands clenched nervously.

"And," continued Penbody, "I'm expecting a phone call from him any moment. I told him this morning that he might be able to make $1,000 before night."

The telephone bell at the desk interrupted him.

Penbody leaned over and eagerly clutched the receiver.

The senator from Mississippi jerked himself to his feet. He stood at a window and looked out over the roof tops of the city.

CHAPTER XXVII.

MRS. SPANGLER GIVES A LUNCHEON.

WHEN Senators Penbody and Stevens had gone Langdon and Haines went over the situation together and concluded that their opponents had no means of defeating Langdon's program—that, after all, Penbody might really have meant his words of surrender.

"But they might try foul play. Better stay right here in the capital the rest of the day," suggested Haines.

Langdon scoffed at the idea.

Haines bustled away to get a few mouthfuls of lunch to fortify himself for a busy afternoon—one that was going to be far busier than he imagined.

The telephone bell rang at the senator's desk. It was Mrs. Spangler's voice that spoke.

"Senator Langdon," she said, "Carolina and Hope Georgia are here at my home for luncheon, and we all want you to join us."

"Sorry I cannot accept," answered the Mississippi, "but I am to make an important speech this afternoon."

"Oh, yes, I know. The girls and I are coming to hear it. But you have two hours' time, and if you come we can all go over to the senate together. Now, senator, humor us a little. Don't disappoint the girls and me. We can all drive over to the capital in my carriage."

The planter hesitated, then replied, "All right; I'll be over, but it mustn't be a very long luncheon."

"Come to eat; back by 3 o'clock," he scratched quickly on a pad on the secretary's desk and departed.

Mrs. Spangler's luncheons were equally as popular in Washington as Senator Langdon's dinners. The Mississippi and his daughters enjoyed the defenses spread lavishly before them.

"Great heavens! I'm late, I'm late!" daughters—what did they think? These thoughts surged through his flustered brain. Then it dashed over him—she was joking in some new fashionable way. He turned toward the fair widow to laugh, but her face was losing its smile. A pained expression, a suggestion of intense suffering, appeared in her face.

"Why do you so hesitate, Senator Langdon?" she finally asked in low voice, just loud enough for the two girls to overhear.

The junior senator from Mississippi looked at his hostess. She had entertained him and had done much for his daughters in Washington. She was alone in the world—a widow. He felt that he could not shame her before Carolina and Hope Georgia. His southern chivalry would not permit that. Then, too, she was a most charming person, and the thought, "Why not?" came to him.

"I'll be there," he said, and he hurried to his carriage.

"What a stunning job you wear," quickly spoke Mrs. Spangler, reaching out her hand and taking the watch from her guest's hands as the case snapped open.

"Oh, that's Carolina's doing," laughed Langdon. "She said the old gold chain that my grandfather left me was—"

"Why, how lovely," murmured Mrs. Spangler, gazing at the watch.

"We have plenty of time yet. Won't you be so kind as to tell me your time is the same as mine," she added, nodding her head toward a French renaissance clock on the black marble mantel.

As the hostess did this she deftly turned back the hands of the senator's watch thirty-five minutes.

"Senator Langdon, I'm beaten," he said. "What more, you're given me the chance of a lifetime to become known as a public benefactor. As soon as you've finished your speech in the senate I will get up and make another one—to second yours. Here's my hand. Anything you may ever want out of Penbody in the future shall be yours for the asking."

Langdon refused to grasp the proffered hand.

Senator Stevens made a show of protesting against his superior's seeming surrender.

"But," he objected, "look here!" Penbody turned upon him instantly.

"Oh, shut up, Stevens; don't be a fool. Come on in. The water's fine."

The pair of schemers, with Norton at their heels, hurried away.

The Pennsylvania drew Stevens into committee room 6, and, ordering the stenographer to leave, drew up chairs where both could sit, facing the door.

"Yes, father, why do you hesitate?" asked Carolina.

Senator Langdon mustered his voice into service at last.

"I've been thinking," he said slowly, "that—"

"That your daughters did not know," interrupted Mrs. Spangler, "of our—"

"The telephone upstairs is ringing, madam," said a maid who had entered to Mrs. Spangler.

The adventuress could not leave the senator and his daughters alone, though she knew it must be Penbody calling her. At any moment he might remember his speech and leave. Already late, he would still be later, though, because he would have no carriage—hers would purposely be delayed.

"Tell the person speaking that you are empowered to bring me any message—that I cannot leave the dining hall," she said to the maid.

To gain time and to hold the senator's attention Mrs. Spangler asked slowly:

"Well, senator, what was it that you were going to say when I interrupted you a few moments ago?"

Langdon had been racking his brain for some inspiration that would enable him to save the feelings of his hostess and yet indicate his position clearly. He would not commit himself in any way. He would jump up and pronounce her an impostor at first.

After a moment of silence his clouded face cleared.

"Mrs. Spangler," he began, "your announcement today I have considered to be—"

"Premature," she suggested.

The maid returned.

"Mr. Wall says Senator Langdon is wanted at once at the capital."

"Great heavens!" exclaimed Langdon, springing to his feet and glancing at the clock. "I'm late, I'm late! I hope to find I'm not too late!"

"Mr. Wall says a carriage is coming for Senator Langdon," concluded the maid.

"We must talk this matter over some other time, Mrs. Spangler," the Mississippi said as he sent a servant for his hat and coat. "I hope that carriage arrives, else I'll try it on the run for the capital."

"It's a half hour away on foot," said Mrs. Spangler. "Better wait. You'll save time."

But to herself she muttered as though unheeded:

"I wonder why Penbody changed his mind so suddenly? Why should he now want the old fool at the capital?"

The rumble of wheels was heard outside.

"Hurry, father!" cried Hope Georgia. The senator hurried down the stone steps of Mrs. Spangler's residence as rapidly as his weight and the excitement under which he labored would permit.

Opening the coach door, he plunged headlong to come face to face with Haines, who had hurried down in a corner to avoid a servant from the Spangler.

The driver started his horses off on a run.

Struggling to regain his breath, the senator cried:

"Well, what are we?"

"Never mind now. But first gather in all I say, senator, as we've no time to lose. When I couldn't locate you and I saw you probably wouldn't be at the senate chamber in time to make your speech on the naval base bill I persuaded Senator Milbank of Arkansas to rise and make a speech on the currency question, which subject was in order. He was under obligation to me for some important information once obtained for him, and he consented to keep the door until you arrived, though he knew he would earn the vengeance of Penbody. That was over an hour and a half ago. He must be reading quotations from 'Merrill's Progress' to the senate by now to keep the floor."

Had paused to look at his watch. The senator stretched his hand out of the window and cried, "Drive faster!"

"Got your speech all right?" called Haines above the din of the rattling wheels.

"Yes, here," was the response, the senator tapping his inner breast pocket. "Thought maybe she"—cried Haines, jerking his head back in the direction from which they had come.

The Mississippi shook his head negatively and set his jaws determinedly.

The coach swung up to the capitol entrance.

"Tell me," asked Langdon, as both jumped out, "how did you find out that—"

"I phoned the house—gave a name Penbody uses—"

"Great heavens, but how did you know where to phone?"

"They were at the door of the senate chamber."

"Norton gave me the tip—for your sake and Carolina's—for old time's sake, he said," was Haines' reply.

"A man's a fool if he believes all his life time lies," says a philosopher, but he's a bigger fool if he doesn't read the book—Cleveland Leader.

It's a Top Notch Doer.

Great deeds compel regard. The world recognizes its doers. That's why the American people have crowned Dr. King's New Discovery the King of Throat and Lung remedies. Every atom is health force. It kills germs, and cures colds and la grippe vanish. It heals cough-racked membranes and coughing stops. Sore, inflamed bronchial tubes and lungs are cured and hemorrhages cease. Dr. Geo. Moore, Black Jack, N. C., writes "I cured me of lung trouble pronounced hopeless by all doctors." 50c, $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by Jackson Drug Co.

"So the world is getting better?"

"So most people think."

"So are we just getting used to it?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Children especially like Kennedy's Laxative Candy Syrup, as it tastes nearly as good as maple sugar. It not only helps irritation and allays inflammation, thereby stopping the cough, but it also moves the bowels gently and in that way drives the cold from the system.

It contains no opiates. Sold by Jackson Drug Co.

"For a millionaire he plays a mighty close and cautious game."

"Well, there ain't any relation to poker."—Louisville Courier-Journal.
